In a considered, if provoca-In a considered, if provoca-tive, response to the mounting barrage of backbench criticism, Mr Raison told a party meet-ing at Sandersted, Surrey, that in spite of suggestions to the contrary, the Government had carried through a high pro-portion of its manifesto com-mitments.

But he agreed that there was much still to be done. The recent crime statistics, national and metropolitan, have made this clear."

However, he then stated:

These things do not call for a hysterical, panicky response or sensational gestures. They do call for wisdom and steady determination to put things right, plus the necessary resources. That is what they have been getting and that is what they will continue to get."
The Conservative backbench

The Conservative backbench lobby was last night hard at work, keeping up the pressure on the beleaguered Home Office, and on Mr Whitelaw, the Secretary of State. A Commons motion, said to have attracted 50 signatures, said:

The law and order issue created political turmoil last night with a split in the Conservative Party and an accusation by Mr James Jardine, chairman of the Police Federation, that the Government had failed to carry out election promises.

Mr Timothy Raison, Minister of State at the Home Office, who denied the breaking of pledges, denounced hysteria and panic by hardliners in the Conservative Party. More than parents might be liable to pay fines or compensation orders for their children.

Mr Raison pointed out that the Commons had been given a free vote on capital punishment, and that the Home Office had launched the first significant prison building prosignificant prison building pro-gramme for decades.

In apparent response to increasing crime on immi-gration, he also said that new immigration rules had been brought in, with a subsequent substantial fall in immigration, and that ministers had worked hard to match more stringent commol with positive developments in race relations.
He said: "Above all, we are absolutely committed to the principle that the law must be the same for all—enforced equally, upheld by all, and backed by both effective policing and the support of the whole law abiding community ". Mr Raison's speech is likely to be a rehearsal of the Home Secretary's response to the Conservative National Council.

Whether it will be enough to moten the very real anger and frustration being expressed in the party remains open to doubt. The fact that the Prime Musister has let it be known that she is taking a personal interest could yet provide the escape valve: with Mrs Thatcher herself intervening. The question then would be whether she supports or over-rules her Home Secretary on the issue.

Police were called and the package was later safely re-moved by detectives from Scotland Yard's Auti-Terrorist Branch. Because it was St Patrick's Day there was immo-diate speculation about it being part of a renewed 1RA cam-

This is a reference to the fact that lest May, Mr Roy Hattersley, the shadow Home Secretary, and Mr James Kilfedder, Ulster Unionist MP for Down, North, received letter bombs for which the ERA claimed responsibility.

Mr Nott was told of the incident when he finished giving evidence to the Commons Select Committee on Defence. Bis secretary said later that she was a little shaken at the time. "It is not a nice thing to have happen, but I am feel-

By Frances Gibb

Rape victims should receive about £2,250 to compensate them for their suffering, the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board recommends in its latest guidelines.

The board says that the sum, which is only £250 more than that suggested in the 1979 guidelines, is subject to adjustment and may be raised or lowered if "there are factors which may cause departure from the given figures".

The new recommendations, the first for two years, have been proposed by a panci of 29 judges and lawyers together with 19 members of the compensation beard. Fair characteristics pensation board. Few show any great increase over the 1979 levels.

Women against Rape said the new amount was devasta-tingly low: "No money is going to compensate a woman for what has happened."

Mr Jack Ashley, Labour MP for Stoke-on-Trent, South, said the figures seemed ludicrously low, and that he would be asking parliamentary questions on them. Miss Helen Reeves, national officer of the National Association of Victim Support Schemes, said it was extraordinary that the recommended rape compensation was less than for scarring.

Mr Brezhnev made the threat yesterday during the speech in which he announced a moratorium on the deploy-ment of new Soviet nuclear missiles targeted against Western Europe and the removal of some existing missiles this year. He said the deployment in Western Europe of American medium range missiles capable of striking targets in the Soviet Union, due to begin at the end of next year, would compel Moscow to put America in an analogous position.

President Reagan promptly suggesting the deployment of rejected the Soviet offer of a missile-carrying submarines off nuclear freeze as a propaganda gesture in his speech in Oklahoma City yesterday, and did not make any direct response to Mr Brezhnev's warning. In a briefing with journalists a senior State Department official noted that Cuba was not specifically referred to in Mr Brezhnev's warning. However, in response to questions, he said that if the Soviet Union decided to deploy medium-range missiles in Cuba this would be a clear violation of the American-Soviet understanding which ended the 1962 Cuban missile crisis.

The Soviet Union then undertook to dismantle and remove missiles which it had deployed in Cuba in exchange for the American undertaking not to blockade the island. As much as £1,000m of the 27,500m Britain is to pay for the Trident-2 missile system will be for a contingency fund, Mr John Nott, Sec-retary of State for Defence, disclosed yesterday. He thought the deal concluded with the United States a better bargain than that struck over Trident-1 in 1980, if only because of the limited contribution that Britain was now making towards Ameri-can development costs. Nor should the cuts in the nor should the cuts in the naval programme after last year's defence review, such as the reductions at the royal dockyards and the end of mid-life modernization of frigates be blamed on the Trident decision.

The defence review had been necessary to bring financial commitments into line with resources, he told the Commons defence committe.

He also dismissed suggestions that it would have been better simply to have added Tomahawk cruise missiles to the Royal Navy's hunter-killer submarines. All scientific and military judements had indicated that they would have been more subject to

Such a decision would have been disastrous, he said, because of the effect it would because of the effect it would have upon the wartime role, now filled by such boats, of hunting down enemy submarines in the Atlantic. Moreover they would be vulnerable, firing cruise missiles from their four torpedo tubes and then taking time to reload before releasing another batch.

Science Report Jumping gene of the sea urchin

By the Staff of "Nature" A group of molecular biologists in Zurich have been led to the conclusion, peen led to the conclusion, failing a more conventional explanation, that a gene has jumped from one species of sea urchin to another within the last million years or so. If that is correct it means that the beginn to consider the content of the million years or so. If that is correct it means that the barrier to genetic exchange conventionally provided by the inability of two species to interbreed can occasionally be breached.

It was while studying species of sea urchins that Dr Meinrad Busslinger, Sandra Rusconi and Dr Max Birnstiel of the Institute of Molecular Biology in Zurich, chanced upon the gene. Their particular interest lies in the genes that code for the family of proteins known as histones, around which the double helix of DNA is wound in chromosomes. Over the past few years Dr Birnsteil's group has been analysing the exact sequence of the histone genes in a species of sea urchin that lives off the coast of Scotland. Parallel

The first surprise came when the genes of the two species were compared. Dr Birnsteil and his colleagues were puzzled to find much more similarity than expected. pected.

Two explanations were possible, the first was that it was the result of some inexplicable constraint on the rate of change in the structure of one member of the histone gene family, the second, that the gene had jumped species, the second, that the gene had jumped species, seemed most unlikely.

It turned out, however, that Scottish waters are inhabited by a second species of sea urchin which belongs to the same family as the American urchin. belongs to the same family as the American urchin. Extending their studies to the second Scottish species, Dr Birnstiel and his colleagues found that it had a histone gene almost identical to that of the identical to that of the distant relative with which it cohabited and further comparisons involving five species of sea urchin confirmed that this near identity of genes was a striking exception to the close correlation between close correlation between the evolutionary time of separation of any two species of sea urchin and the degree of difference between their histone genes.

Using that correlation one would have to conclude that the two Scottish species separated from a common ancestor less than a million years ago, although the fossil evidence gives a figure of 65 million unions. Left-wingers in all unions have been urging opposition to the agreement because they believe it will lead to job losses, even though there will be no compulsory redundancies. Supporters argue that the interim agreement gives unions greater influence over the introduction of new systems because they will be consulted at an early stage before a final decision is made on which system will be used.

Big projects being pre-pared are the computeriza-tion of the Pay As You Earn scheme and the replacement of he mainframe computer at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre at Swansea. What makes an airline human

With Pakistan international Airlines, it's just like coming home.

All great airlines are similar in many ways. The need for a high degree of professionalism, advanced technology, efficiency and reliability are

All kinds of everything.

Pakistan International Airlines is one such airline ... it's just like coming home. When next you fly to America, Europe, the Middle East, Africa or Asia, fly Pakistan International Airlines.

The Liberal-Social Democrat alliance has reached agreement, after protracted with the March 31 deadline for countrywide agreement with high sickness rates. With the March 31 deadline for countrywide agreement the parties across the country difficult negotiations, on the share-out of parliamentary seats in Kent.

Under the deal, which is still provisional, the Liberals will fight pine constituencies and the SDP seven. It has been greeted with relief by senior figures in both parties, because Kent is regarded as one of the most sensitive negotiating units, with several promising seats that each is keen to contest.

The outcome is regarded as a model agreement conforming to the guidelines drawn up between the parties when the negotiating process began. The Liberals will fight Conservative-held Maidstone, which both paties regard as the most winnable and, in accordance with the guidelines, the SDP was given several of the next most aftractive propositions, including Thanet, North, Faversham; and the new constituency of Medway, which takes in the present. RFU gets a reminder from sports minister

SOUTH AFRICA

Nobody should underestimate the implications of what was involved in British sportsmen playing in South Africa. The Indian and Pakistan cricket teams were welcome to play here this year and it was only to be hoped they would still come. Mr Neil Macfarlane, Minister of Sport, said during question time in the Commons. Commons.

He added that the issue was something the Rugby Union were going to have to consider now that 100 nations in the world were playing rugby.

All governing bodies were aware of the Government's position on the Gleneagles agreement, and it was for them to advise their members, he told Mr John Carfiste (Luton West, C), who had asked if the Government would issue advice to sportsmen who had asked if the coveriment would issue advice to sportsmen intending to visit South Africa on the application of the provisions of the Gleneagles agreement to

Mr John Carlisle asked: will he mr John Carlsie saket: While emphasize to those intending British sportsmen that the Gleneagles agreement, however innocuous it may be, is merely a discouragement to sporting links with South Africa and that the with South Africa and that the Government has no intention of restricting the freedom of choice of sportsmen to play where and against whom they wish?

Will he advise sporting bodies such as the Test and County Cricket Board that they have no cight to victimize players or to right to victimize players or to withdraw livelihoods from players who make their own freedom of choice to go to South Africa? of choice to go to south Arras'
Mr Macfarlane: I hope he will raise his surveillance of this problem to world problems and multi-racial sport at home and abroad. The Government signed the Gleneagles Agreement in 1977 and reaffirmed it last year, in Malburge in October.

in Melbourne in October.

As for the Test and County Cricket Board, it is entirely a matter for them how to approach further dislogue with cricketers who have gone to South Africa. It is not a matter for me.

Mr Denis Howell (Birmingham Small Fleath, Lab) greeted with "who went to Moscow?" said: The suggestion that I went with aston Villa to Russia to give aston visia to give comfort to the Russians is ludicrous. Would the minister join me, as it is the return leg tonight, to send a greeting to Asion villa and hope they complete the discomforture of the Russian football team?

The cricketing authorities have done all they can be expected to do to uphold the Gleneagles agreement and they have only been stopped from doing more by the deception of the cricketers involved here, a deception which has put the livelihoods of their colleagues in jeopardy.

Will he say whether rugby authorities have taken a similarly strong line with the Gloucester and Cardiff clubs? In view of the importance to all this to world sport and the Commonwealth particularly strong he either himself of through the Sports Council call together all sports bodies and consider this question for the collective good of British sport?

Mr Macfarlane: I will gladly Mr Macfarlane: I will gladly endorse his wish that Aston Villa and other clubs do well in and other clubs do well in European trophies and championships.

The International Cricket Conference and the Test and County Cricket Board have made County Cricket Board have made clear over the years that they will not have matches against South African cricket teams. A number of other international governing bodies have supported the Gleneagles agreement.

So far, the Rugby Football Union have not given such a direction and this is something they are going to have to consider as over 100 nations of the world play rugby.

Individuals are free to leave this country to participate in sport, but if they do so they have to acknowledge what the problems are. The previous administration also took a similar view.

Mr Cyril Townsend (Bexley, ration also took a similar view.

Mr Cyril Townsend (Bexley, Bexleyheath, C): As the Government went out of its way to reaffirm the Gleneagles Agreement, is it not likely that the people of this country in the months ahead are going to appreciate that the activities of these so-called sportsmen in South Africa are short-sighted, selfish (some Conservative interruptions) and in the long run against the spirit of multi-racial sport, against the interests of their colleagues and against the long-term interests of the British Commonwealth? There was no educational justification for the university cuts in Scotland, Mr Bruce Millan, chief Opposition spokesman on Scotland said in launching an Opposition protest against cuts in higher education in Scotland.

Mr Merlyn Rees, chief Opposition spokesman on energy (Leeds, South, Lab) said that it was known before the event that the Government was going to lose money on the sale. The stags made a killing of £25.5m. How much money did the Government get out of it? Was it £63.7m. The Government undersold, with the community losing £25m. That mistake must not be made again. The Opposition wanted to know who got the shares. Apart from the 3.6 per cent bought by workers, the owners would be the trusts, merchant banks and pension funds. Ministers sue over Mafia deal allegation

From John Earle Rome, March 17

Two Christian Democratic members of the Government today denied having acted as intermediaries with the Camorra, the Neapolitan Mafia, last year to arrange a ransom for the release by the Red Brigades of a prominent local politician from their party, Signor Ciro Cirillo.

Signor Cirillo, who was kidnapped in April and released in July, has admitted payment of a 1,450 lire (£630,000) ransom, but says it came from his family and friends.

Yesterday and today, the Communist Party organ L'Unita in front-page reports alleged that Signor Vincenzo Scotti, the minister of the Merchant Marine, who are both Neapolitans, visited a noted leader of the Camorra in jail last spring and asked for his intervention to negotiate with the Red Brigades for Signor Cirillo's release.

The ransom, according to L'Unita, was provided in banknotes and gold ingots by a bank in Puglia against guarrantee from a public sector insurance company, and was paid in thre instalments.

Senator Giovanni Spadoli ni, the Prime Minister and Republican, today called in Signor Scotti, who afterwards in a statement denied having had any contact with the Camorra or Red Brig-

you can make it your career. Within these limits, there are a number of possibilities that might appeal to you. While you're at school.

There are two ways of joining.

Firstly, you can apply for a 2 year Army Scholarship which will help you study for your 'A' levels or their equivalent. We consider this a preparation for Sandhurst. After an interview, and if we think you have what it takes to be an Army Officer, we'll award you a grant of up to £600 a year plus a maintenance grant of £750 p.a. When you accept a Scholarship, in January or July, you must be between 15 years 5 months and 16 years 5 months. As an alternative to staving on at school, you can apply for a place at Welbeck, the Army's own sixth form college, which provides an education aimed at a commission in one of the Army's technical corps.

To qualify, you must be well up to GCE or SCE 'O' level standard in English Language, Mathematics, Physics and at least two other subjects, preferably including Chemistry.

At the time of joining in January or September, you must be between 16 years and 17 years 6 months. Success at Welbeck and satisfactory 'A' level passes will earn you a place at Sandhurst. From there, you'll have a good chance of going on to university.

When you leave school. Three options are open to you.

If you already have or expect to get five 'O' levels, including English Language, you can apply immediately for a Short Service Commission of 3 years which can be extended later on by a further 1-5 years.

On the other hand, with two 'A' levels, you could plump for a full career, Regular Service Limited Commission. You could take advantage of it if you have a guaranteed place at a university, polytechnic or college of technology but

Length of service is usually 4 to 9 months without obligation to rejoin the Army when you've graduated.

If you're going to university. There are two schemes to consider.

If you expect to graduate before you are 25, you can apply for an Undergraduate Cadetship at any time up to your final year at university.

While you study we'll pay you £14,103 over three years in return for a minimum of 5 years service as a Regular Commissioned Officer after graduation.

A Bursary is similar to a Cadetship except that you commit yourself to only 3 years as an Officer and receive £900 a year to supplement any LEA grant you may be awarded while you study.

When you graduate. You can choose a Short Service Commission of 3 years or a full career, Regular Commission.

Although a degree is not a short cut to the top in the Army (qualities of leadership, courage and muturity are as important as academic qualifications) you will get unfedated seniority for the years you've spent at university.

In other words, having completed your Sandhurst course, you'll join as a Lieutenant instead of a Second Lieutenant.

To excel at presentation, or "hosting", is to possess one of the cardinal virtues of American politics and enter-tainment. The man or woman who sells you something is almost as important as the product you might wish to product you might wish to buy; conspicuous consumption, like dieting, is a pleasure and a duty shared. One recent TV documentary on the anthropology of sophomore-induction at "Ole Miss" was promoted less on its quality and content than on the fact that a no more on the fact that a no more than fairly well-known movie. than fairly well-known move-star, who happened to share the background of the girls in the film but had nothing useful to add to the subject, presented it. mother would have put it. It is written by Marilyn French, author of The Woman's Room and The Bleeding Heart (a novel, no relation to that long-lost sub-Shakespearian incest play). It argues that Shakespeare should be inter-preted in the light of the "gender principle": of which more later. At first sight, to those of us bred up on Dr Tillyard — the Spock gener-ation of Eng. Lit. undergrad-uates — the initial concept seems, er, well, a little suspect, a bit fuzzy at the edges. But having got through Ms French, a long read but a rewarding one, with growing fascination, let me, tired but admiring, say my view has wholly changea.

The theory of the book comes from the not uncommon notion of dividing life's experience into masculine and feminine. Certain qualities have come to be con-sidered masculine: qualities like strength, determination, and bravery. Others have come to be categorized femi-nine: sympathy, mercy, intuitiveness, gaiety. The mascu-line qualities have been more highly valued, in Shakes-peare's society and, indeed, in ours as well.

The large, intriguing argument which Ms French puts forward, very learnedly and cogently, is that William Shakespeare, at the start of his career, accepted these constrictions, the frame of mind implied by what she calls "the gender principle": when he began to write, he had profound respect for "masculine" qualities and profound suspicion of "feminine" ones. But relatively quickly, by the time he reached The Two Gentlemen Richard Holmes of Verona, it is obvious he had undergone a volte-face and had come much closer to admiring "femininity". By the end of his career, she maintains, he was deploring, and fearing, the power and the capriciousness of the masculine principle and idealizing certain aspects of the feminine.

The way she works it out. Shakespeare's tragedies are masculine, steady in expo-sition, linear in their con-struction, and his comedies more feminine, more volatile and shimmery, more brilliant in language, more eccentric in their plan. His places can be thought of as masculine or feminine: the Venice of the Merchant is a male place, tough and mercenary, but

Belmont, restful, hazy, is altogether feminine. His people, men and women, on the whole are poles apart: the Petruchios and Benedicks, joke figures of machismo, the Protection of Posthymuses. the Proteuses, Posthumuses, Orlandos, Bassanios, being waited for and rescued, resurrected and transfigured by the Julias and Imogens, the Rosalinds and Portizs. Shakespeare's symbols of chaste constancy, his types of ideal woman. The fact that they are dressed as men is not just accidental. Shakespeare never quite got over his sheer fear of sexuality, his panic-stricken vision of woman both as virgin and as whore. Yet he understood, and understood more fully and indeed, it seems, more painfully as he grew older, that there had to be a fusion, there had to be a balance between the dual values of masculine and feminine. As Ms French so clearly argues, he understood the dangers of undervaluing "the fluid, insubstantial and emotional dimensions of experience." Where this experience." Where this happens — as in; say Macbeth — there is disaster. In some of his plays, the plays quite often called the Problem Plays, Shakespeare comes his closest to achieving a full synthesis.

In Britain, a country in which, amazingly, we sit ourselves down to take Macbeth for O-level — Macbeth! a play which is surely quite impossible to compre-hend at all below the age of 37 — it is easy to assume that we know our Shakespeare backwards. To jolt us out of our completency, remind us that Shakespeare is indeed one of life's most endless pleasures, it needs a pro-duction of a new and sudden brilliance, like Peter Brook's now legendary Midsummer Night's Dream; 2 performance of a quite surprising rightness and intensity, say Vanessa Redgrave's Rosa-lind, Jonathan Pryce's Hamlet; or a commentary of fresh and startling insight, related to the way we see our own

Cleopatra of water cities revisited

By George Bull

Venice The most triumphant city

(Michael Joseph, £7.95) No one could ever be boring about Venice, city of infinite variety. George Bull has concucted a rich plum-pudding of a book, stuffed with all the familiar ancedotes, and some that are new to me I like the one about the Englishman Coryat in 1608, rescued from an angry dispute with a rabbi by the British Ambassador's sec-retary "who happened to be passing in his gondola". How to beat a retreat in style! There are marvellous quotations, ranging from the Ostrogoth Cassiodorus to Proust and Thomas Mann, and glimpses of every notable visitor to Venice over the past eight hundred years. Erasmus complained about the food but discovered the Pervigilium Veneris, Milton acquired a Monteverdi score: only Sir Philip Sidney and Raiph Waldo Emerson remained immune to the charm of this "most triumphant (Philippe de Comcity" mynes, 1494).

But plum-puddings can lie heavy. Mr Bull appears to have read everything ever written about Venice, and his prose, as he says of Goethe's, is "dense with allusion". He covers Venice's history, music and art with such dedicated thoroughness that he obscures its raffish galety. He would be a dull dog at the carnival. He omits J. G. Links's gem of a guide from his bibliography; can it have heen too frivolous for him? And he has been ill-served by his publishers; there is no index, and although the jacket is exquisite, the picture editor could win a prize for the sheer inanity of his captions. Every time a new name appears in the text, up pops a postage-stamp portrait for easy identification, but you will need to turn to the list of illustrations at the front to find out anything about the picture itself. This is a most estimable book, but I miss the glitter of winter sunshine on St Mark's lagoon. Back to Morris for Atmosphere and Links for Pleasure.

But I wish to say that you will be disappointed quite some, there being no conundrums, love, or even wickedness to be seen in Nellie Without Hugo; and precious little life or even precious little life, or even stuff, in Three Women at the Water's Edge.

Miss Elliott is no phonus bolonus proposition like these. Her novels are among the best and most subtle around: quiet, unforced stories of surprise; deceptively easy-going; fonny and sad. Furthermore, she speaks English, so you will not have to waste time with the sign language.

The secret seems to be in the impregnable technique and the total reliance on deadpan understatement. Grosz sets his human chamber of horrors gibbering and cavorting in front of us. Hubbuch's people are frequently no less horrifying, but they are usually caught in what one can only call repose. Sometimes it is the repose following violent death, but more usually it is at a timeless moment when something unspeakable has just happened offstage (otherwise why is the knife in the boy's hand stained with blood?), or at an ambiguous point in their enjoyment of perverse delights in the bedroom, the back-street or at least the cake-shop.

After the war he returned to painting and began to exhibit again; in the Fifties he went, belatedly, through an expressionist phase, which meant in practice that his eloquent and economical lines became at times dramatically distorted under the pressure of what he had to say, but without ever losing any of their steely control.

Hubbuch's paintings and drawings have some of the nastiest children, the most bloated clerics and capitalists, the blousiest prostitutes, and most stinking drunks in art. And yet the view remains cool, climical, aloof, in all of them he finds some strange sort of beauty. And his landscapes and plant stradges challenge comparison. Hubbuch's paintings and drawplant-studies challenge comparison with Dürer. Now that he has been well and truly rediscovered, it is unthinkable that he could ever be forgotten again.

The big thing of the moment in Germany seems to be the reintegration of artistic exiles into the German tradition. Hubbank are integrated for the so-called into the German tradition. Hubbuch was an artist of the so-called "inner exile". Hans Richter, the subject of a large-scale retrospective at the Akademie der Kunste (also to be seen in Zurich and Munich), was a more obvious case of exile: he left Germany (for Moscow) on entirely political motivation as early as 1931, and never really returned, choosing to settle rather in Switzerland when he came back from America in 1952.

The very early, vaguely social-realist drawings are vaguely social-realist drawings are sometimes striking, but the paintings tend to be muddy and uncontrolled, and time has not dealt well with the long scroll painting/collages of the war years, either physically (the little bits of newspaper brown and curl and disintegrate) or psychologically. The later paintings show a fatal indecision about whether they are to have bard or soft edges, and the

That Money Can Buy (1948) have a thorough-going amateurish awful-ness which negates the talents of his eminent collaborators (Leger, Ernst, Caider et al). Perhaps the only truly distinctive works are the scrolls from the early Twenties, and the little films which grew out of them. All the same, it is useful to be offered a definitive occasion for assessing Richter's place, even if he does not survive the consequent scrutiny as well as Hubbuch — you cannot, after all, win them all.

Also at the Akademie, along with a very interesting show of unfamiliar theatrical designs by 10 Italian artists, mostly more or less Futurist (Balla, Prampolini and Chirico among them), between 1915 and 1930, is by coincidence a show devoted to another painter-film-maker, Pier Paolo Pasolini. Admirers of his films may well know that he began as an art student, but few will have been aware that he continued to draw throughout his otherwise busy career, or for that matter what a very fine draughtsman he was.

There are an astonishing series of self-portraits including a coun-of self-portraits, including a coup-le of excellent early oils, some jolly and vivid early comic-strip drawings, and perhaps above all page after page of profile studies of Callas, dating from the time when he was directing her in Medea, leading up to a final portrait, finished and refinished to the point, almost, of non-existence, and yet with everything essential there. Clearly Pasolini might well have been an important painter if he had not become an even more important poet and film-maker; the range of the man's talents has not yet ceased to amaze.

In a moment of aberration I referred to Stephen Gilbert in my review of Aftermath at the Barbican as "Stuart". My apologies.

This month the musical world is celebrating Walton with all the oversell normally reserved for centenaries, so it was good to be reminded on Tuesday that he is still only 80, that he is still us and that he is still as the second of the composer alone, happily to composer alone, happily to be seen and rousingly cheered afterwards as he stood in his box.

The acclaim was hardly less enthusiastic for Henri Dutilleux's Toute un monde lointain ..., also composed composing, or at least was doing so at the end of 1980 when he wrote the Passacag-lia for solo cello that Mstislav Rostropovich was here playing for the first time.

It would be idle to pretend tor. Dutilleux's title comes that Walton is a Verdi or a Stravinsky, composing on the boldest scale into his eighth and ninth decades. Wigan Grammar School, he had already decided that he wanted to be a policeman rather than go to university.
In 1953 he became a constable in Manchester.
Another constable on the best with him then remembers the station sergeant announcing even before Anderton arrived, "We've got a real good 'un coming from the college next week". His

The book, which results from a survey of 6,000 viewers of BBC Television's programme That's Life, does not take sides in the natural versus high technology controversy but comes down firmly in favour of women being allowed a choice.

It does not show that women are having inductions, pain-killing drugs and foetal heart monitors forced on them against their will but it does show that many of them would have liked more information about what was being done, or offered to them, and greater respect for their views. It will stir up still further the troubled waters at the Royal Free by showing that almost two-thirds of the women did not feel they had reasonable freedom of choice about the position in which they had to give birth—the very issue on which the controversy at the Royal Free hinges. A senior doctor there used to allow women to give birth on their sides or on all fours, if they so wished, a practice which is

The idea of the survey came from Esther Rantzen, presenter of That's Life, who used to get frequent letters from women complaining from women complaining about their treatment during pregnancy and birth.

She asked viewers who were expecting babies in 1981 to write to the programme. Out of the 10,000 replies, 6,000 took part in the survey, filling in detailed forms consisting of 111 questions, drawn up with airvice from the medical profession: It is the largest survey of its kind the largest survey of its kind ever undertaken.

The survey is a rich source of statistical material. Many of the results are compared with figures printed in a book entitled British Births 1970, published by William Heinemann Medical Books in

They show that the rate of home deliveries is down (2 home deliveries is down (2 per cent compared to 12 per cent in 1970), the use of epidural anaesthetics up (14 per cent compared to 0.9 per cent) and the use of pain-killing drugs down (15 per cent had drug-free births compared to 3 per cent in 1970.

Artificially-induced births were more frequent than in were more frequent than in 1970 (34 per cent compared to 26 per cent) but were down on the peak of 40 per cent in the mid-1970s.

Hospital ante-natal clinics predictably came in for a lot of criticism. Long waits in hot and stuffy rooms, no refreshments, no creches for tired and hungry toddlers, long and expensive journeys and a lack of privacy were all complaints made about such clinics. Many complained particularly about never seeing the same doctor twice.

She said mothers who only attended such clinics irregularly were often criticized as irresponsible but the de-mands made on some women in terms of distances they had to travel and times they had to wait were quite unreasonable.

The increasing tendency to concentrate ante-natal care in hospitals was particularly worrying because although it did not adversely affect middle class women who had cars and could more easily take time off work, it did put off working class women coping with public transport and unsympathetic em-ployers, and it was these women who were most at risk of baving stillbirths or handicapped babies.

Unless such clinics could be made more attractive to such women, they would slip through the ante-natal care

An example of the distances some women had to travel was given in the case of Pauline, aged 18, from Studiey. She was expected to travel 20 miles to the hospital

The unsympathetic attitude of some employers is also illustrated. Bridget, aged 24, worked in a factory. "My job entailed lifting and they ware movilling to give me a lighter mwilling to give me a lighter job, resulting in my being rushed into hospital at 25 weeks with a threatened

In the light of many years' experience of the reflexes of the race relations pressure groups, and of those in the media who reflect their thinking, whenever there have been riots or other offences involving blacks, we know the answer to these questions now. What is condemned is the information conveyed by the statistics rather than the

The explanation is provided by the statistics.

At the time the figures were produced, the Assistant Commissioner, Mr Gilbert would have been for the political argument — which is the first thing that the race proportion between blacks, and whites (or better still, that most had been committed by whites) would not their number.

Front and back benches alike would for the most part be reluctant to go over the ground again when neither the arguments nor the facts to which they relate have since been revolutionized. There was no majority in this Parliament for the restoration of capital punishment nor is there likely to be.

The federation's purpose must have a longer view. It is also perhaps to rally public support for the police who are feeling a bit beleaguered even, in their darker moments, deserted — after the urban rioting last year, the barrage of criticism it brought down on them, the rising trends in most of the more publicly sensitive caregories of crime, and the creeping propensity to public violence in word and deed. Capital punishment is directly relevant to a very small part of this broad field of concern. But because of the acute difficulties that even its most limited application gives rise to, and because its presence ar. absence in the range of penalties available to the courts is quite commonly seen as in some way indica-tive of the public determination to fight crime, it has to any given time. The moral arguments adduced to show that the state ought not take life in punishment, though weighty and for some minds decisive, do not foreclose the public argument. That must proceed to an examination of the utility of the death penalty for preserving the peace and good order of society. If it can be shown to be a uniquely effective deterrent againstcriminal activity that poses a standing threat to life and safety, its reintroduction may be necessary. If that cannot be shown, it is better to be without it in view of the admitted difficulties sur- may possibly be decisive in the community. We are forturounding its administration favourable circumstances if nate. But it is as much the and the risk of miscarriage of applied with the freedom and Commonsense suggests that the availability of the death penalty would deter pro-fessional criminals from going armed in the com-mission of their crimes; and there is some, though not conclusive, statistical support for commonsense, There is in all probability a significantly longer prison sentence awaiting a robber who shoots and kills a policeman than awaits the iconvicted author of a vicious and valuable robbery with violence, But on a rational calculation the difference may not be perceived so great as to outweigh the worth of the possibility of shooting a way out of trouble if disturbed in the act, and so escaping punishment alto-gether. Under the present penal system there is not a lot that can be done to reverse the conclusion of that calculation. Making such a killing a capital offence would most decisively reverse it. This is a consideration that weighs in favour of the limited resto-ration of capital punishment. It is otherwise with terrorism, terrorism of the politically motivated sort at least. In the first place many who kill selectively or indiscriminately for political reasons are fanatics, beyond the reach of rational penal dissussion. In the second place the drama be considered on its ments at and ceremonies, surrounding capital trials and executions hillings, and may be turned to advantage by the terrorists propaganda agencies. No one who was awake when republi-can prisoners in the Maze prison were starving them-selves to death will be in doubt as to the measure of the likely agitation if they had indicative, the other is positive. But before anyone concludes from that that a case has been made out, he has to meet this difficulty. It is not proposed that all homicides should be hanging offences only some, of a particularly socially threatening kind. The death penalty is rightly seen as standing apart from all other penalties as uniquely dreadful; and unique also in as much as, once imposed, it cannot be lifted if shown to have been imposed in error. Being a penalty in a class by itself, it is justifiable and fitting only if the crimes to which it attaches are also in a class by themselves, similarly defined by their being uniquely

In practice that cannot be done: at any rate the congruence was signally absent from the distinctions made between capital and non-capital murder before the penalty was suspended and then abolished (except for high treason) in the 1960s, and no one has since shown how the congru-ence can be achieved. Without it the death penalty would be a capricious, suspect chronically disturbing element in the penal system. The argument from deterrence would have to be very powerful indeed to overcome that objection; and however it is rationally assessed, it does not come out as strong as

Simply to repel the case put forward by the Police Federation is not enough. Nor is there any need to impugn their motives or suspect their intentions in playing on public opinion. The police stand out in front of us for the principle of order and the sway of the law against ever more sophisticated criminal techniques and against lawless and violent inclinations that do not diminish and probably increase. They are not obviously winning the containment. LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Effect of Pope's visit on unity

From the Bishop of Chelmsford and the Right Reverend B.C.

Sir, The English Anglican-Roman Catholic Committee (the national body charged with relations between our two churches), of which we are co-chairmen, met in London on March 9. We wish to record the welcome of our committee for the forthcoming pastoral visit of HH Pope John Paul II to this country. The Pope himself on more than one occasion has stressed his hope that this visit will further the cause of Christian unity in Great Britain, and an equally strong concern has been present in the thinking and planning of those who are organizing the visit. We warmly share this hope for its ecumenical possibilities. It would be unrealistic to pretend that there is not con-siderable anxiety about the visit felt by some members of all the churches. But these concerns do not, in our view, outweigh the positive gains which we look for and hope for from this visit.

The Pope's presence in this country, in May, cannot be dissociated from the publication within the next month of the final report of Anglican/Roman Catholic International Commission (ARCIC) and in particular from ARCIC's discussion of the role of the Papacy. Yet the two things must not be confused, and in particular we must not expect the visit itself to solve the theological problems discussed

On May 29 the Pope will be the guest of the Archbishop of Canterbury at a great service in Canterbury Cathedral in which representatives of all the principal Christian traditions in England will be taking part. This service will be followed by a time of "serious and well prepared discussion" between the Pope and the leaders of these churches. In his presidential address to the General Synod of the Church of England the Archbishop of Canterbury spoke about the service, which he hoped would give us "the right model for our attitudes to this visit". Three emphases will be embodied: "First, welcome; then, affirmation of a common baptis-mal faith. Finally, affirmation of our common hope and vision for the future.

We identify ourselves with the Archbishop's words and call upon all Christian people in this country to make the most of the great positive opportunities which will be presented to us by the Pope's visit. In particular we hope it will provide a challenge to deeper commitment to unity ordinary

Yours faithfully, JOHN CHELMSFORD. CHRISTOPHER BUTLER, Bishopscourt, ESSET. March 16.

America's European allies not only refused to help but denied America the use of European airports and refuelling facilities. There are two ways of looking at the obligations of an alliance. Sir. John Wilton's viewpoint seems to be that because Europe was more dependent on Arab oil than was America, Israel should have been sacrificed for the sake of Europe's needs. Luckily, America did not share that view. Had she done so history would not have looked kindly on the Western'alliance. Western'alliance. Yours faithfully, GEORGE GARAL

Far-sighted policy for electricity

From Professor J. M. Cassels, been tried but which, quite Sir, In a report, "Power chiefs (March 15), you set out, whether fully or not, criticisms of the "power chiefs" by the Electricity Consumers' Council. The main thrust of the criticisms appears to be that the "power chiefs" have been stupid and greedy in presiding over the growth of the Central Electricity Generating Board to the size it is today.

As an observer, and often a critic, of the CEGB I would like to express the view that such comment is unfair. Curiously enough the real culprit is not mentioned in your report — the fact that in this country it seems to take 10-15 years to finish a major power station. With a lead time so long the "power chiefs" would have to be clairvoyant to get the system right, and cer-tainly they are not that.

If we look back 15 years we see Mr Heath's government trying to urge the country into growth at 4 per cent pa by telling every important industrial sector not to mind what the others were doing, but to see that it was itself doing its independent bit towards a more active future. The "power chiefs" duly did their bit by planning a very large electricity system and setting into motion the elements that had a long lead time, the power stations.

It is by this process that we have arrived at a generating system which is too large for the country as it is, unfortunately wallowing in the depths of a depression instead of growing steadily at 4 per cent pa. We should not seek to blame the "power chiefs" (nor, in my opiniou, Mr Heath) for a national political and economic experi-ment which perhaps should have

Closing the frontiers

From Lord Hetch of Lusby Sir, On March 4 I was informed by a minister of the Foreign Office in the House of Lords that the number of British citizens receiving supplements for service overseas has fallen from 4,083 in 1979 to 2,975 in 1981. The minister added that the reductions are expected to continue at about 10 per cent per annum over the next few year

When the increase in fees for overseas students at our universities is added to the reduction in British citizens enabled to serve abroad, it is clear that our communications with the rest of the world are undergoing a drastic change.

The minister does not seem perturbed about this deterioration in our relations with other peoples. He even suggested that foreign governments "sometimes choose to use the aid funds for other purposes", though he must have known that it is the British Government which has delib-Government which has deliberately reduced supplementation without giving the other governments any choice.

Mansion House plans From the President of the Royal

Town Planning Institute Sir, If our cities are ever to break away from their stale nineteenth and twentieth-century forms the planning authorities will need to take a relaxed view of schemes like that of Mr Palumbo. It is very easy for planners to ask themselves whether the scheme is good enough or whether it is better than what is there at present, but by asking these questions we stifle initiative and change.

They are not the questions which planning law expects us to ask. Change may not always be for the better, but we shall never know unless we try it out. Personally I find the design for the Mies van der Rohe building less stimulating than similar buildings abroad and there is little inspiration in the layout for the square. These are not good planning reasons for refusal and

From Mr Desmond Neligan Sir, Prior to 1960, when there was compulsory National Service, provision was made by the 1948 National Service Act for application to be made to an independent committee for postponement of call-up on the ground that hardship would be caused to the applicant, and/or to his dependants.

The proportion of such applications to the young men in fact conscripted was, no doubt, very small; nevertheless, in the event of the committee refusing to grant postponement, appeal lay to "the umpire", a barrister ap-pointed by the Crown to hear the before the committees, but I do recall that in the vast majority of cases the grounds of the appeal were completely genuine.

May it not, perhaps, be inferred from the fact that the majority of conscripts did not apply for postponement of callup, and from the further fact that the majority of those who made such applications had good grounds for doing so, that in the late 1950s young men and their relatives accepted National Service as one of the facts of life? Is vice as one of the facts of life? Is there any good reason for supposing that some form of national service would not be equally acceptable today? Yours faithfully, DESMOND NELIGAN.

Cattle market welfare

From Mr A. C. W. Hart-

Sir, The reason for the RSPCA inspectorate reduction about which Mr J. S. R. Griffith complains (March 11) is simply money. The RSPCA faced a deficit of almost £2m for 1982. Stringent cuts were necessary throughout. Unlike Government or industry, we cannot put up charges if costs exceed money available.

Our inspectors will still attend markets. Spot checks will still be made. Our inspectors will just not be able to spend quite as long as hitherto at each market. Our resources in any event could never allow us to attend each of the 500 markets all the time. We would prefer to see animals slaughtered near the point of production rather than transported up to 200 miles or more for commercial reasons.

We have indeed an RSPCA markets working party sitting currently. This is investigating all aspects of market welfare. It is receiving evidence from all involved in markets including the weterinary profession and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fish-eries and Food. The report when published towards the end of the ear is likely to require stringent improvements.

Pirating of film

From Mr Michael Winner

Sir, I have recently been made aware of the extraordinary volume of illegal business of selling pirated film cassettes in this country. My film Death Wish II, has the dubious distinction of being the fastest ever available on the underground market. Not only are illegal video tapes sold all over England at this moment, but I also understand it has been playing in pubs in Dublin for some six weeks, and is available via roundsmen in Hastings on a door-to-door basis! Last year the American Trade Association estimated that film rentals worldwide lost through illegal video sales of films amounted to £500m. This figure will have increased substantially by now. One hundred million pounds was reckoned to be lost by United Kingdom cinemas Prosecutions are hampered by the 1956 Copyright Act, which provides penalties of 40 shillings to £50. Since cinema managers have reported being offered £4,000 to "lend" films to pirates overnight, even private for damages are insignificant in relation to the problem. I under-stand the highest award in this case is £12,000 damages and £8,000 costs. Lord Fletcher is now steering a Bill through the House of Lords which, if passed, will make it illegal to sell a pirated video, which would transform the situation. It is to be hoped that his Bill will pass the House of Lords and then find time in the Commons, even though as esti-mated £100m will have been lost in this country by the time it becomes law. Included in that, presumably, is a vast loss to the luland Revenue, and thus to the nation. Yours faithfully. MICHAEL WINNER, Scimitar Films Ltd, 6-8 Sackville Street, W1. March 4.

Sir, I read with interest David Walker's article (March 3) about unemployment amongst non-whites. It seemed a pity, howwhere this serves only to maintain mineteenth and twentieth-century functions which are out of date. Sadly, alternative functions are not being given full consideration in some cities and we are prone to treat the symptoms rather than the causes of urban decline. But that is a higger issue. ever, that the census results shown in the accompanying diagram were not discussed in the text since there is a danger of misinterpretation of the figures presented.

The first principle to get straight is that only birthplace information is available from the 1981 census. Clearly there will be some correspondence with the concept "non-white" but the nonwhite population born in this country cannot be measured using 1981 census data. Thus the figures quoted cannot be for concentrations of non-white people" as the title states. Not only this, but the proportions given are for the population living in households with heads born in the New Commonwealth and Pakistan (NCWP) which will obviously include non-NCWP-born members of these bouseholds but miss the NCWP-born in other households. Also included in the census figures will be people not traditionally thought of as non-white. For instance Haringey's sizable Cypriot population. Yours faithfully,

Operas in contest

From Mr Mosco Carner

Sir, In his review of Margot la Rouge (February 22) your music critic, Paul Griffiths, asserts that, while Delius's opera was written for the Concorso Sonzogno of 1902, a similar contest was organized by the rival firm of Ricordi a dozen years earlier that brought forth Cavalleria Rusticana as the winning work.

The facts are quite different. For one thing, Ricordi never sponsored an open competition and, for another, he rejected Mascagni's opera, when Puccini showed him its score, out of hand, saying that "I do not believe in it" — one of the few miscalculations ever made by this shrewd judge of operation winners.

Mascagni did enter the Son-zogno contest and won it in 1890 with sensational acclaim. Yours faithfully.

Post Office under fire over forecasts

The Post Office, which now expects to make an £80m profit this year, is under fire for using earlier low profits forecasts to justify, raising postal charges.

After the proposed price increases in postal charges the corporation. was expected to make a profit of £48m which it would be required to do to meet the Government financial targets of 2 per cent return on revenue.

By January POUNC was informed by the post Office that due to a number of circumstances including good volume in Christmas mail the profit was expected to be over £70m instead of the budgeted

After negotiations the Post Office agreed to defer its proposed increase of 9.3 per cent on postal charges for a month from January 1. Other forecasting examples cited by the council, were, in October 1980, a forecast loss of £38m without tariff inor 138m without tartir increase and a forecast profit of 17m with the increase; although the actual profit made was 129.2m and forecast in October 1979 of 135m loss for year 1979/80 became a profit of 149.3m

Commission rise cut back

The Stock Exchange has yielded to widespread criticism of its new commission charges by cutting the proposed increase in fees to small investors. The effect of the new commission scales will result in an increase in stockbrokers income of 4.2 per cent compared with the 7.3 per cent rise first sought. The new equity scale proposed by the Council raises the charge on smaller transactions by 10 per cent against the 16.7 per cent originally suggested. This new basic rate of 1.65 per cent will raise the cost of a typical £2,000 equity bargain by £3.

Plessey is feeling better . . . Tokyo looks poorly

Going Dutch brings £19m for expansion

Plessey's final exit from capacitor production seems to point the way to future microelectronic, and specifically connector, production expansion in the United States (Drew Johnston writes).

Sale of the United Kingdom, United States, Italian and West German capacitor plants to Arcotronics Holdings of the Netherlands for £19m was being regarded yesterday as a good deal, even though the share price dropped 3p to 375p. But, under the circumstances of yesterday's overall market slide, the slight fall could be interpreted as mute approval of the deal.

Capacitor production is struggling against a pronounce fall in demand. Last week, Standard Telephone and Cables, one of the biggest European producers of capacitors, announced that its components subsidiary had seen profits drop from £12m in 1980 to £2m last year.

Plessey, ranked among the biggest capacitor producers in Europe, saw its own division record sales of £26.4m for the year to April 1981. But market analysts expect this year's profit figures will reflect a big dip in demand.

The group said yesterday that

The group said yesterday that the proceeds of the sale will be existing mainstream business.

Connectors are used extensively in circuit-board microelectronics, and with their application to the telecommunications, defence-related and data processing business, volume growth is expected to be around 20 per cent a year.

Plessey's balance sheet is now understood to show around £100m in cash, so acquisition speculation is bound to be strong. One analyst says: "This gives it the ability to buy something interesting."

Any purchase — there is also talk of a link-up with one of the bigger United States communications businesses in a move into the office systems field — will firm up an already strong rating around 15.

Analysts are looking for 1982 profits of £108m and a gross dividend yield of 3.7 per cent. For 1983, forecasts put this up to £126m and a yield of 4.3 per cent.

of fiscal 1982 will fall by 4 per cent. Poor export sales of audio equipment and electronic parts, and lower growth of sales of video tape recorders are mainly to blame.

Canon Electronic has blamed the squeeze on profits and orders of audio equipment in its forecast of flat pretax profits on a Japanese accounting basis for 1982. Sankyo Seiki has revised downward its forecast of profits to be announced late summer from yen 1,800m to yen 1,600m.

the yen has been brought about by other causes.

Interest rates in the United States are overwhelmingly higher than those in Japan: the gap is currently 9 per cent. That has proved too much for both inter-national and Japanese investors, who have turned their backs on the Tokyo stock market to chase high yields in New York.

Sales are up-from £43.2m to £46.82m, profits have closed the year at £1.63m, against £1.76m. The net profits as a percentage of sales have gone up from 2.3 in the first half of the year to 4.6 in the second year to 4.6 in the second.

Analysts were suprised by the improvement, which is why the shares rose 1½p to 43p against a falling market. Mr Nicholas Corah, executive chairman, hopes a continued good performance will enable a recommendation to be made for an increased divi-dend; this year it is maintained at 2.9p. Mr Corah's reasons for the better margins were: "Steady increase in the volume of production, a modest improvement of our selling price, the benefits of our £1.9m a year capital investment programme, and cost-cut-

Profits drive

The car distributor, which last year severed its connexions with the hotel business and moved into electronic components, increased pretax profits from £12.8m to £15.8m in 1981 and is paying an unchanged dividend of 10p gross.

The profits rise was entirely due to the fall in interest charges from £8.2m to £2.9m, which more than offset a £2m fall in operating profits to £19m. Lex benefited from the cash raised through a succession of sales

an agreement to purchase Morton-Norwich Products' pharmaceutical

The dilemma for Opec is that, at its reduced procuc-tion levels, the margin for future output cuts is at best limited. If the 18.5 million harrel a day target level does not do the trick, the only card left up its collective sleeve is a further reduction in Saudi output.

Given the Saudi Arabians' belief that Opec oil is overpriced and the kingdom's own minimum budgetary requirement of 6.5 million barrels a day, the pressure on individual Opec members to cut loose with unilateral price cuts in a bid for market share must be enormous. Fear of just such a desper-ently requires it, is not quite as absurd as it may sound. Their point, which is re-inforced by many Western analysts, is that in the shortterm the market will not support any price remotely near the existing 534 a barrel. With summer, traditionally a period of weak oil demand, and companies desperately trying to run down stocks the market value of the marginal two to three million barrels a day of output that Opec is considering leaving in the ground is effectively non-existent.

With this kind of argument, it would not be surprising if Opec were to decide that, rather than make humiliating across-theboard cut in prices, its best course would be to sit tight and wait for these abnormal seasonal factors to work hemselves out of the system. In the meantime they would sell as much oil as they could at $34 a barrel and dispose of the balance at "fire. sale" prices where they could.

By the autumn, with companies starting to stock up again, the present pricing structure may become tenable again.

This strategy appears to be what tomorrow's meeting is really about: the problem is whether Opec can hold together its fragile and fractious membership through what are bound to be difficult months, especially since some of them suffer proportionately far more than others. The omens are

This country has proved to be successful in the inter-national trade in services. Its receipts from invisible trade (services, plus investment income and government transactions) are the second highest in the world after the United States. But substituting invisible receipts for visible earnings has its limitations. The international market in services is only about a fifth of the size of the market for visible goods and world demand for manufactures has shown the more rapid growth. Moreover, Britain's exports of services are still only half that of its manufactured and semi-manufactured goods. Service exports would, therefore, have to rise by a quite extraordinary amount if they were to provide a sufficient surplus to pay for our imports of manufactured manufactured goods as well as food and raw

There must also be a good deal of doubt about how far traded services can provide employment. Tourism and overseas construction quite labour intensive, but the services of the City of London create fewer jobs than manufacturing.

One of Irish rugby's most distinguished players and heroes, Jackie Kyle, who orchestrated the team at stand-off half when they won the Grand Slam for the only time in their history, in 1948, has flown from Zambia to Paris to see his country play France on Saturday in quest of another. "In fact," he told me yesterday, "I had an invitation to attend a sporting 'do' in Dublin at the end of this month, and the yesterday, "I had an invitation to the first of his 40 Irish caps at centre in their triple crown season of 1949, it will be a family thought of travelling early to take in the Paris match was irresistible."

It will be the first time Kyle hopes that Des O'Brien, the no 8, will be flying over from Scotland. In the case of another 1950 Lion, Noel Henderson, who won the tirst of his 40 Irish caps at centre in their triple crown season of 1949, it will be a family reunion. He married Kyle's sister.

To achieve the grand slam of 1948 Ireland beat France 13-6 in Paris, England 11-10 at Twicken-ham, Scotland 6-0 at Lansdowne Road and Wales 6-3 in Belfast. They ran in ten tries and there international rugby has come to him by courtesy of the radio and

Nis, Yugoslavia, March 17.—
The substitute, Aleksandar Panajotovic, shot Radnicki Nis of the Uefa Cup with a two-goal burst in the second leg of their match with Dundee United here

Radnicki, trailing 2-0 from the first leg, looked down and out when United survived a torrid first half. But Panafotovic wiped out the Scottish lead in the 53rd and 73rd minutes and Radnicki snatched an unexpected place in the last four when the United goalkeeper, Hamish McAlpine, needlessly gave away a penalty five minutes from time.

McAlpine misjudged a cross from the right and only managed to palm the ball away. As he fell, he pulled down Sead Beganovic and Branislav Djordjevic gleefully converted to send the 15,000 home fans who had crowded into the tiny Nis stadium into the pulled to the tiny of the tiny of the pulled to the tiny of the tiny

Chairman's family to fund Hull

The future of Hull City, put in the hands of the receiver nearly three weeks ago, has been assured — at least until the and assured — at least until the aids of the season. Mr Christopher Needler, chair-man and principal shareholder, in a statement said that his family are to continue funding the club until then.

Mr Needler said yesterday: "in order to remove all mecertainty and to allow the receiver time to evaluate properly various effers received for the club. I can confirm that the Needler family are funding Hull City until the end of the season and that all players, coaching and administrative contracts are being honoured on existing terms."

He went on to say that he was continuing to keep the club aflost — even though he has already ploughed in over £300,000 — because of Hull's improved performances and the significant increase in their gates of late.

same, quarter-rinal stage last year.

A fearful mistake by the Liverpool goalkeeper, Grobbelaar, forced them into extra time after they had dominated a match in which their main opponent appeared to be the referree. Late equalizer annoyed Albion manager Wolverhampton W (1) 1 Eves

The West Bromwich Albion manager, Ronnie Allen, was annoyed with John Martin, the referee after a late Arsenal equaliser at Highbury on Tuesday night. Allen must have thought that his team had made sure of three points when Nicky Cross, the substitute put them 2-1 up in the 85th minute. Durhan, Mar 17 — South Africa scored their third victory in three encounters with the touring English XI when they won the second 50-over match by 79 runs here today, the Press Association reports. By early evening the Englishmen were on a flight to Cape Town, wondering whether they could muster the strength and confidence to fare better in the second four-day match, which begins on Friday.

The opening one-day match was closely contested, but today's was hardly a contest. The English knew they would struggle because their front line howlers. Taylor and Old, had been ruled out by injury. Defoat became a formality when Gooch, who had scored two centuries against the Springboks in the last 10 days, and Boycott were out in the first 11 overs with only 38

Karachi, March 17 — The Pakistan cricket captain, Javed Miandad, is to step down for the coming England tour after the refusal of ten players to join his team for the series against Sri Lanke

Lanks.

In a statement issued today in Faisalabad, where he is leading his side in the second test against Sri Lanka, he said he had taken his decision "in the interests of the country's prestige and my pride in being a Pakistani".

He also appealed to "rebel" players to forget the unfortunate controversy and play for Pakistan in the Third Test against Sri Lanka at Lahore on March 24.

In the Second Test, his depleted side is facing the embarrassing prospect of following on against Sri Lanka, when the second test resumes tomorrow after a rest day. Although leading 1-0 in the series, Pakistan stand at 210 for eight in reply to Sri Lanka's 454.

Gold Cup would be fine reward for Night Nurse

By Michael Phillips, Racing Correspondent

The amateurs will be relieved that Midnight Court just failed to qualify in time for the Christie's Foximuter Challeng Cup, though he will be eligible next year if conditions remain unchanged. With no Grittar, Spartan Missile or Rolls Rambler in today's field, the receiptons ware ones. or Rolls Rambler in today 5 bent, the race looks very open.

Ireland in tall cry for Festivalrecord

With the National Hunt Festival two thirds over, the Irish are threatening not just to take Cheltenham over, but to paint the whole place a brilliant shade of green and paper the walls with punts for good measure.

Of course, we should have known that on St Patrick's Day, of all, days, they would hit us hard and often. And having strolled away with three more prizes to add to their three on Tuesday, they stand poised to shatter their record of eight victories achieved in 1958.

Yesterday, having landed a swift uppercut via Mister Donovan in round one, they rode the home side's counter-punching in th Sun Alliance Steeplechase and Quean Mother Champion Steelechase, where their great hopes, Drumlargan and Drumgora, fizzled tamely out. Then they hustled back in rounds five and rights to the chin as Hazy Dawn and Doubleuagain took the National Hunt Steeplechase and Mildmay of Fleet Steeplecase, respectively.

Whyte praised for Rathgorman romp

By Michael Seely

Rathgorman was the star of the middle day of Cheltenham's three-day extravaganza of National Hunt racing yesterday. Ridden with incredible aplomb by Kevin Whyte, the horse who is supposed to detest heavy ground and stiff fences was always cantering over his rivals in the Queen Mother Champion Chase.

Sailing into the lead at the second jump from home, Whyte was soon looking round for nonexistent dangers. Storming clear up the hill, Rathgorman beat Chinrullah by 20 lengths with the favourite, Drumgora, four lengths away in third place.

The mighty Mac would undoubtedly have finished second if he had not come to grief at the last fence.

This victory gave Michael

This victory gave Michael Dickinson his 66th winner of the season lifted the total of prize money won by the Yorkshire trainer this season to over £200,000.

L200,000.

Last year, Rathgorman finished last of the eight runners to complete the course in this race. Yesterday Dickinson ascribed much of the horse's dramatic improvement to Whyte "Kevin and Rathgorman have struck up a magnificent understanding. He's always been a brilliant horse on easy courses, but I never thought he'd win this race today, particularly in the mud."

There can be lively down that particularly in the mud."

There can be little doubt that Rathgorman is now the outstanding two-mile chaser in England and Ireland. James Lilley, Rathgorman's owner who is a businessman from Belfast, was a proud and happy man as he triumphantly raised the trophy aloft to the cheering crowd after the presentation by the Queen Mother.

Jeremy Maxwell bought Rathgorman as a three-year-old on Mr Lilley's behalf. The horse was sent to Dickinson on Maxwell's advice as a five-year-old as there are so many more opportunities are so many more opportunities for horses of his type in this for horses of his type in this country.

It has become clear that confidence behind Silver Buck for this afternoon's Gold Cup is now on the upgrade. The trainer said: "Obviously, we'd like better ground, but the horse has never been better in his whola carser. Silver Buck's blood count is absolutely spot on." Dickinson's father, Tony, added: "I've never seen the horse so full of life and fire as he was in his recent victory at Market Rasen."

Rathgorman has been on the go for some time, but Fred Winter showed us a potential winner of the Cheltenham Gold there was no doubt at all that Winter thinks that Brown Chamberlin is something special.

Yesterday's winner was bred at Jean Broad's Emral Stud in Cheshire, and Winter was advised by Freddie Maxwell to go and look at the horse when he was four. "I liked him straight away", the trainer said. "Not only is Brown Chamberlin an exceptionally handsome individual. He is also descended from the same family as two Gold Cup winners. Linwell and Kerstin."

The Irish started the afternoon on a high note when Tommy Ryan brought John McManus's Mister Donovan home, one and a half lengths ahead of Spider's Well in the Sun Alliance Novices Hurdle. The short-priced favourite, Angelo Saivini, could never het clear of his rivals and was a beaten horse two hurdles from home. Despite his starting-price of 9-2, the Irish had obviously considered Master Donovan to be one of their bankers at the meeting and the welcoming cheers must have been heard in nearby Cheltenham.

when he blundered his chance away at the last open ditch.
When asked about Brown Chamberlin's future plans, Winter replied, with a twinkle in his eye, "I think he's done enough for the season". The seven-yearold has now won his last five races for Mrs Basil Samuel and there was no doubt at all that Winter thinks that Brown Chamberlin is something special.

Michael Dickinson: runaway success with Rathgorman

Edward O'Grady, the winning trainer, said that Mister Donovan had originally been turned down by his veterinary surgeon for having a "dicky" heart, and it was surely a strange twist of fate, that the same vet, nicknamed "Demmy O'Byrne" was the owner of yesterday's second, Spider's Well.

Two meetings in doubt

There will be a 3pm inspection at Lingfield today to determine whether racing can go ahead tomorrow. Part of the steeple-chase course is waterlogged and the weather would need to keep dry for racing to be possible. If racing is not possible tomorrow's hurdle races will be transferred to Saturday for a seven-race hurdle programme with the steeplechases cancelled. Tomorrow's meeting at Warwick is also in doubt because of waterlogging and a stewards inspection will take place at 10am this morning.

There used to be a delightful rule that on a bright day you put on a bright fly and on a dark day you put on a dark fly, and this worked admirably for many years until some busybody or other, some mosey-parker of a scientific fisherman produced positive proof that it ought to be the other way round—a bright fly on a dark day, ecceters etceters, much to the confusion of mankind.

governing bodies

From April 1 the Scottish Sports Council will pay the full costs of drug testing for governing bodies of sport in Scotland, including transportation charges to and from the Drug Control and Teaching Centre at London University's Chelsea College.

For several years the council has been offering 75 per cent grants towards the total cost of testing samples but although there are more than 70 governing bodies, only two sports have been taking advantage of the offer.

taking advantage of the offer. Many have little spare money and the council hope that the carrot of total financial support will induce others to join athletics and cycling in voluntary testing.

However the use of drugs in sport is an even touchier subject than the use of sport by than the use of sport by politicians. It receives far less publicity because knowledge (as opposed to surmise) is limited and because too many competi-tors and officials prefer to sweep truth and conjecture alike under the nearest rug.

The Scottish Sports Council is a progressive organization, not given to histrionic behaviour, and their decision to make more of their own limited funds available ingests that the misuse of drugs in Scottish sport is greater than has been acknowledged. If so, it is reasonable to suppose the problem is also larger elsewhere in Britain; one cannot presume to guess what is happening abroad.

Peter Rearly, an Olympic diver in his youth and now the council's chairman, chose his words carefully but the message was clear: "The use and abuse of drugs in sport may be more widely pursued than is im-agined", he said, "That is why we are anxious to help governing bodies in sport to determine whether that is so, and to what extent there may be malmay be may practices."

Mr Heatly was obliged to be cautious because, so far, the evidence is limited. It will be a different story, one way or the other, if the verious authorities take advantage of the council's take advantage of the council's offer.

Kenneth Hutchison, its chief executive and an advocate for sweeping aside the cobwebs to see what, if anything, lies beyond, said: "I do not want to be alarmist. No one is suggesting that the use of drugs to improve performances is widespread or wholesale, but I do believe there is evidence to suggest that drugs are being taken on a wider basis than many suspect.

"My own view is that the level of abuse is very much higher than is generally recognized, certainly on a world-wide scale. The committee for development of sport in the Council of Europe takes that line and there is wide making its own arbitrary selection.

By Iain Mackenzie cost to themselves, whether the problem exists within their particular sport. We are not dooking for a witch hunt but we do want officials to take this offer seriously, if only to prove that their sport is free from drug abuse."

He was unsure about the level

He was unsure about the level of response: "There is no way we can even guess but let me say this: I hope we are embarrassed by the number of requests we get for financial help."

He may be disappointed. Questions put to a random sample of governing bodies proved only that they are not prepared openly to admit that a drugs problem exists and may be growing. One or two would not discuss the subject; others said they probably would not take samples for testing; others again said they would consider doing so. As Mr Hutchison said: "We have done our part. Now we must wait and see what bappens."

Council to open the controlling body in Scotland had taken advantage of the existing offer of 75 per cent grants because some, at least, of the other 97 per cent had, or thought they might have, something to hide. national golf training centre

A national golf training centre, the first in Scotland, is to be opened later this year at the Scottish Sports Council's national training centre in Large, near Glasgow, Iain Mackenzie writes. It is intended for use mainly by leading amateur golfers and young players with potential, but will be open to the public at certain times. public at certain times.

The total training area has been fitted into 15 acres and hardly bankrupt a sports organis-ation to pay 25 per cent of the total. "I dont's think there is any question of a deliberate whitewash by officials", Mr Hutchison said, "although there are grey areas. It is much more likely to be a case of officials convincing themselves, that dough do not been fitted into 15 acres and includes video equipment to record players' swings. The design will allow players to practice approaches to greens under various conditions and at short and long "holes". They include playing in head, cross and following winds, into the sun, up and down hill, in bunkers of different shapes and sizes, and themselves that drugs do not circulate in their particular sports; an assumption which may not be valid but which has become valid in the minds of those concerned".

The council has just produced assert note divers on details. of different shapes and sizes, and or orrerent diages and sizes, and round a dog leg.

The Scottish Golf Union and the Scottish Ladies Golfing Association intend to make extensive use of the facility with senior, youth and junior national squads. Regional and district players will also use it and the Sports Council plans to run golf Announcing the plan in Edin-burgh yesterday, Kenneth Hut-chison said: "Our policy is to ensure that Scotland has at least one venue for each sport which can cope with international training and competition. Golf, which has several championship courses, posed a special problem and it was agreed that a national practice and training area was the priority requirement."

By creating conditions which takes that line and there is wide concern about drug-taking on two grounds: the morality or ethics of winning what cannot be seen as a genuine victory, and the danger to health."

We cannot force any authority to test individuals either in trainging or on competition days." Mr Hutchison said. "All it was put to Mr Hutchison we can do is give them the the the coaches who must be near their charges."

are the colours which, according to the experience of generations of salmon fishermen, are those most likely to take fish.

Indeed, if one takes those orange and red and yellow colours which form part of the dressing then something like 67 per cent of all successful salmon files are predominately or partially red or orange or yellow in colour — the red and orange as a kind of colour which comes: out in practice to a blood-orange. The other colours take fish. Indeed they do. But black, red. brown, silver, blue and green, or a combination of all these, are, se to speak, in the second division. Why, for heaven's sake, white is excluded from all but one of the 72 patterns is a mystery of inexplicable complexity and depth. But that is how it is.

Salmon fishing is full of such things. All one can say, perhaps, up to a point, if Trout and Salmon is any guide, and it may not be, is that it is quite possible that a fly with reddish-orange or yellow wing may not be too bad a choice to start the season, all other things being equal, which they never are.

the High Street banks could fill all their vacancies with graduates, not just the graduate traineeships. "But of course we wouldn't want to do that", said one spokesman "There wouldn't be the opportunities for all of them and they'd get bored."

Recruitment targets are generally low, new entrants are few in comparison with the early to mid seventies, and staff turnover has dropped substantially at junior levels. Banks can afford to be highly selective, insisting on high standards of academic attainment as well as good personal qualities.

Traditionally - ambitions focused on becoming a bank manager. Responsible for rep-resenting the bank in the locality, the manager also has the overall supervision of the branch's day-today operations. Yet as technology increasingly takes over the drudg-ery of figure-keeping so the nature of the work changes - less admin and more service may be the motto of the future. Twenty-four-hour cash cards are already showing the clearing banks a way towards a cut on counter-work.

possibilities is one of banking's strong attractions.

While the clearing banks offer the greatest number of vacancies, they are by no means the whole story. The Bank of England, merchant banks, the overseas banks and specialist outfits like ICFC all provide interesting oppor-tunities. Indeed, for many gradu-ates it is the smaller, more prestigious banks which offer the more attractive prospects. Competition for such jobs is extremely rough and the tendency has been to recruit from Oxbridge. One of the alluring features of these City banks has always been the glamour of dealing with big business and governments (ever fancied going to Poland?) rather then administering the accounts of the local butcher and baker. But here again, beyond a certain level of intelligence and numeracy, the really important qualities lie in the capacity to create confidence and to work effectively with clients. Whatever your bank, it is still the personal touch which counts.

Tradisionally—ambitions have 20,000 people, says the Crafts Council, earn a living by the practice of a craft.

Margareta Pagano reports

Come daybreak each weekend hundreds of craftsmen around the country gather their wares and set off to pitch their market stalls.

One of the more popular commercial hunting grounds is in central London, where the two-day arts and crafts market on the south-east corner of the Covent Garden piazza is the largest in the land and among the biggest of its kind in Europe. It is such a thriving forum, both for selling and exhibiting, that competition for a few square feet becomes stiffer by the week.
In the four years since the market opened the organizers, who lease the land from the Greater London Council, have nearly tripled the number of stalls they offer, from 64 to 175. From the daily inquiries received they believe that space could be doubled again; in one recent week 36 craftsmen who arrived at dawn to queue for a casual stall were turned away. Craftsmen, whether it cane walking-stick maker from Norwich or the jeweller from Manchester, travel there every week because of that reputation. It is usual to find international and But although becoming a bank British buyers scouting the manager is the goal for many it is for the unusual or fantastic British buyers scouting the stalls

For many of the craftsmen it is their first crucial point of contact with the buying public because their working weeks are tied up with preparing stocks and other part-time work, such as teaching. Markets, because of their low cost, are also much easier to run than going through shops, galleries or working by personal commissions. The market coordinator, Mr Ron Vere-Field, guessed that 30 per cent of the stallholders go on to their own successful businesses. The Crafts Council, part of the Government's Office of Arts & Libraries, estimates there are now 20,000 professional craftsmen in this country who make a living by their craft. Of these, probably 10,000 earn enough from their work to live indendently, while the others draw support from partners, family or part-time work.

By a twist of fate today's milieu of high unemployment, job in-security and mass-produced artefacts everywhere is more conducive to giving people the confidence to go it alone.

Redundancy payments have given many people who previously practised a craft as a hobby the impetus to start their own venture and second career. Perhaps of more consequence is that so many program employment patterns no normal employment patterns no longer offer long-term security. The risks of choosing a craft — whether it be pottery or lampshade making — and starting your business may often appear the more attractive option.

The Crafts Council, whose mison d'être was to encourage the quality of craftswork, is now actively engaged in helping makers. Grants and subsidies are available on a competitive basis; and the council reckons that one in five of the hundreds who apply emerge with a grant for half the cost of start-up capital and maintenance for a year.

On a regional level CoSIRA, the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas (141 Castle St. Salisbury, Wiltshire SPI 3TP, tel 0722 6255), also offers loans to craftsmen.

Details of grants and other services are available from the Crafts Council, 12 Waterloo Place, Lower Regent Street, London WC1Y 4AU.

The submission and told lies.

At the close of the proscation's case the judge ruled that the prosecution had to prove something done by the respondent which amounted to acting or attempting to deceive customs officers. He viewed the evidence as amounting only to bringing to negation is section 174(2) nor in its forerunner, part of section 232 of the Customs Consolidation Act 1853, was there any suggestion that customs officers needed to be deceived or defrauded in order to establish guilt. What had to be "fraudulent" was not behaviors to establish actions to the control of the customs to t order to the "fraudulent" was not behaviour towards a customs officer but the evasion or attempt the prohibition. at evasion of the prohibition.

Consequently it was inappropriate to import narrow definitions of "fraudulent" from branches of the law concerned with fraud practised on other persons.

The wider meaning was well illustrated in R v Williams (1983) and deliberate, that is to say, without mistake". Such use was to be found in the first comprehensive definition of theft" in English law by Bracton, who had borrowed it with some modification from Roman law — 2 use well known to the drafters of the 1853 Act.

Further, an exhaustive consideration of the meaning of and Excise; Treasury Solicitor.

"fraud" and "fraudulent" by Viscount Dilhorne in R v Scott (1975] AC 819, 836-7, 839) had a direct bearing on the issue in the present reference, and if the judge's view—was correct it produced remarkable results. Evasion might and often did commence before the customs control point was reached; examples were Borro and Abdulla and R v Smith (Donald) ([1973] ()B 924); and if deceit was a requirement there could never be a conviction under section 170(2) in such cases.

"Fraudulent" in section 170(2) had the effect that, in prosecutions under the provision for fraudulent evasion or attempted evasion of a prohibition empted evasion of a promotion or restriction with respect to goods or duty chargeable thereon, the prosecution had to prove fraudalent conduct in the sense of dishonest conduct deliberately intended to evade the

Electrical system not allowable 'plant'

(Inspector of Taxes) Before Lord Hailsham of St Marylebone, Lord Chancellor, Lord Wilberforce, Lord Edmund-Davies, Lord Russell of Killowen and Lord Bridge of Harwich

Speeches delivered March 11 The House of Lords declined to interfere with the decision of fact by special commissioners that a large part of expenditure incurred in installing an entire electrical system at a new department store did not qualify for capital allowance as the "provision of plant" for the purposes or the trade under section 41(1) of the Finance Act 1971.

Their Lordships dismissed an appeal by Cole Brothers Ltd., a member of the John Lewis Properties Ltd group, and affirmed the decisions in favour of the Revenue of the Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Stephenson, Lord Justice Cliver and Sir David Cairns) affirming Mr. Justice Cairns) affirming Mr Justice Vinelott, who had held that the Vinelott, who had need that the special commissioners were entitled to find that the installation of certain items of electrical equipment at the John Lewis multiple store at Brent Cross shopping centre built in 1975 did not entitle the taxpayers to an initial capital allowance on the whole total of £945,600 expenditure.

expenditure. Mr Barry Pinson, QC and Mr John Gardiner for the taxpayers; Mr J S Hobhouse, QC and Mr Robert Carnwath for the Crown.

LORD HAILSHAM said that the question revolved round the entitlement to an initial capital allowance in respect of the installation of various items of electrical equipment in a multiple store at the Breat Cross shopping centre. The items still involved amounted in value to [453,218 out of a total cost of £945,600, the balance of £492,382 representing

His Lordship considered from the citations that the word "plant" was not an ordinary word, but had been applied to industrial and commercial equip-ment in a sense borrowed from botany. In a sense borrowed from botany. In each case the contrast was between the thing implanted and the setting in which it was placed.

But the line must be drawn somewhere, particularly where, as here, in the case of capital allowances, plant attracted one type of allowance, rated cur-rently at 100 per cent, and buildings another and lower rate. There must therefore be criteria by which the courts defined the frontier between the two. Hence had arisen the authorities.

His Lordship considered many nis Loruship considered many authorities where distinction had been made between "setting" and "plant", and to Australian cases including ICI (Australia & NZ) Ltd v Federal Commissioner of Ltd v Federal Commissioner of Taxarion ((1970) 120 CLR 396) which was of interest, because it was the only recent case when an electrical installation per se had come up for consideration in the present context.

Mr Justice Kitto had said there that it seemed to him impossible to regard electricity reticulating agents and the water reticulating plants which ran through an office building as "plant"; though that should be contrasted though that should be contrasted with Lord Justice Donovan's ramark in Jarrold v John Good & Sons Ltd ([1963] 1 WLR 214) that "the heating installation of a building may be passive in the sense that it involves no moving machinery, but few would deny it the name of 'plant'...".

His Lordship would find it difficult to draw a significant difficult to draw a significant distinction between the "reticulation" of a neating installation and that of an electrical installation; but at that point he began to wonder whether the House was in truth being invited to decide a question of fact and degree, as to which there was no appeal from the commissioners, or a true question of law, as to which an appeal would lie.

The resolution of his doubt was not rendered easier by the form in which the case had been stated by the commissioners, stated by the commissioners, who, following recent and not particularly admirable practice, had stated their decisions in the form of a mingled series of propositions of mixed fact and they added semesthat law, and then added somewhat inconsequently: "The question of law for the opinion of the court is whether on the facts found our decision was erroneous in point of law".

The scheme degised by Parlia.

ment was to limit appeals from the commissioners to questions of law, and it seemed to him that the commissioners did rather less special commissioners, that the than their duty to Parliament, if with the aid of counsel on both sides, they did not identify a definable point of law for the decision of the court, but left the court to guess what precise point of faw was being asked to decide.

It was decided in favour of the taxpayer, on the basis of clear and strong findings of fact by the special commissioners, that the items in question were not merely the setting in which the definable or created something which he offered to his customers.

The House was here concerned with a different trade, that of a second commissioners is an additional to the second commissioners.

In his Lordship's search for a In his Lordship's search for a definable question of law on which a decision of a court could be founded, he had at first been attracted by the argument for the taxpayer company, persisted on throughout the case, that the whole electrical installation from the point where it was delivered by the electricity board at 11,000 volts, to the point at which having been transformed to 240 volts and delivered in the form of light and power to various points in the store "should be looked at as a whole and not analyzed into its component parts".

But the more that simplistic view was considered, the more clearly his Lordship came to realize that the commissioners, as 'a tribunal of fact, were entitled to decide, as they did decide, after analysing the evidence and visiting the factory, that the entire electrical justaliation should not be regarded as a single whole but that the multiplicity of elements in the multiplicity of elements in the Brent Cross installation, and the differing purposes they served, made the present case distinguishable from IRC v Barclay, Curle & Co Ltd (1969) 1 WLR 675) — the dry dock case — and others where each of the component parts was directed towards a single purpose. Either view could have been taken. In other words, the question was one of fact.

Once the "single entity" submisssion was rejected by the tribunal of fact so that it could analyse the indivdual components having regard to the function and nature of each, the House was in the realm of fact and degree from which it was not possible to differ as to the items still in dispute. The appeal must be dismissed.

LORD WILBERFORCE, concurring, said that in IRC of Scottish and Newcastle Breweries Ltd (The Times, March 5) Lord Lowry had made a comprehensive review of the authorities on the meaning of "plant" on the 1971 Act and other statutes. He also stated the principles by which courts should be guided, in reviewing decisions of the in reviewing decisions of the general and special com-f law".

Installed in the taxpayer's premises for the purpose of its trade.

The House was here concerned with a different trade, that of a department store, and with different items. As the case was presented to the commissioners they consisted of a large number of pieces of equipment costing £945,000.

The taxpayers claimed that they were entitled to capital allowances in respect of expenditure on the provision of the totality of the equipment as being machinery or plant proviced for the "purposes of trade". The commissioners were strongly urged to adopt the single entity approach, but they did not agree to do so.

Plausible arguments had been advanced in favour of a single entity approach in the House but they failed, for the fundamental reason that, whatever merits that approach might have, to reject it involved no error of law.

The commissioners' decision was based on their examination of the facts and their personal inspection and so was in the realm of pure fact. Their conclusion had been accepted in two courts.

two courts. As to the second line of attack—on the commissioners' individual findings as regarded individual items or categories—the taxpayers had failed to satisfy his Lordship that the commissioners exceed in law.

commissioners erred in law.

There was no finding that the main electrical system was in any way special to the taxpayers' business or anything more than the standard equipment of a commercial business.

Some other individual findings had been attacked which were near the border line. But that was a common feature of cases about plant: the decision must be left to the commissioners.

LORD EDMUND-DAVIES. agreeing, said that the formula the commissioners adopted their case stated, though it had for some time crept into common usage in many branches of the law, was a bad one and should be dropped.

LORD RUSSELL agreed the question was basically one of fact and degree for the special commissioners to decide and not commissioners to decide and not for the House to substitute its view unless an error of law had been made by the special commissioners. The appeal should be dismissed Lord Bridge agreed.

RUC man fires at road check gunmen

The Reverend Ian Paisley Joined the growing opposition to aspects of Mr James Prior's plans for devolution yesterday, but urged him to hold elec-tions for an Assembly as soon

Furniture shops throughout the capital are full of East German desks, chairs and tables at present, yet there are no queues. This gives a surface impression that martial law has created an ecomonic miracle: queues cut at a stroke. The shops full. But most Poles simply cannot afford the new prices and what makes it worse, they have no means of raising their wages.

The point of the Hungarian system of market simulation was that citizens would be encouraged to work harder to afford the goods in the shops. But in Poland there is no logical relationship between working harder and living better. The result is frust-ration: not an explosive political one, for Poles can still afford food and the staples, but rather a dull distaste for their work and a sense of having

A further complicating effect of economic reform, one that is only just beginning to gain pace, is that of unemployment. The marrial law authorities set out with the aim of making labour more produc-tive. That meant, in short, reducing the work force of certain factories, by means of voluntary redundancies. Although there is a commit-ment to reemploy the jobless— there is officially no un-employment in a communist employment in a communist state—the real strain fails on women as more and more of them are having to seek work to keep the household income sufficiently high to buy the same amount of food as before

This was what Mr Jones did for a while yesterday. Such occurances are quite common in the Army where, as in Parliament, men are thrown together in confined, denorting and incapitaty condangerous and insanitary condangerous and insanitary conditions without their womenfolk. At the court-martial or inquest after such incidents some Army psychiatrist always gives evidence to the effect that there was nothing in L'Cpl Jones's previous behaviour pattern to suggest that he was going to run amuck with his bren gun at the annual regimental open day.

So it was not entirely sur-prising, on entering the gal-lery yesterday, to see Mr lones running amuck with his tongue. He was directing it straight at the Government front bench. "The Minister has had all sorts of represen-tations from Burgley and he tations from Burnley and he has done sweet f. . . "Ohoooo! "

Labour benches cried. "Some-body stop him," we prayed from the gallery. "Get in there, lad." shouted Mr there, lad." shouted Mr Dennis Skinner (Bolsover, Lab).

Mr Jones was waving his arms about as the phrase emerged. He was red in the face. Was history about to be made? Was an MP about to use, as the tabloids would put it, THAT WORD! Admittedly, Mr Reg Race (Wood Green, Lab) used it when discussing the by-laws appertaining to lewd shops during the report stage of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisious) Bill shortly before 6.30 p.m. on February 3 (Let no one say February 3. After this excitement it was a relief to be able to seek refuge in the matter of the rebellious cricket tour of South Africa.

Mr Denis Howell, the Mr Denis Howell, the Shadow Minister for Sport who turned up in Moscow at the precise moment at which the rest of his party was denouncing the English cricketers for visiting wicked countries, defected back to the Opposition dispatch box. He proved to be a man without shame. For he calmly laurched into a routine denunciation of the cricket tour nunciation of the cricket tour of the kind which we were unable to hear from him at the time because he was on a sporting tour of a country with a racialist regime

He had a disgracefully easy time from the Conserva-tive backbenchers. Their benches were not very full. Most of their right wing beasts were away. True, Mr Tony Marlow (Northampton West Lah) managed as in Tony Marlow (Northampton West, Lab) managed an insult. But since it was: "Go back to Moscow", it lacked originality. Mr Winterton (Macclesfield, Con), who did excellent service the other week in discovering. Mr Howell's presence in the Soviet Union, was absent. Where was he when we needed him? So all my own efforts to incite hatred against Mr Howell had been in vain. Mr Howell had been in vain. He was self-righteous to the end: "The idea that I went with Aston Villa to give comfort to the Russians is ludi-crous", he muttered at Mr Marlow, thus missing the point. For the more interest-ing topic is what comfort the Russians gave to him.
